ABSTRACT

FDI is the best practice policy being a great driving force for the sustainable development of any nation mainly for developing and underdeveloped nations. After the Liberalisation and Globalisation countries have already realised the importance of FDI and are trying hard to break the all barriers to enhance the flow of FDI and are attracting more and more countries and creating new avenues for investment. Due to the economic stability, less political risk, favourable policy measures and vigorous economic growth, foreign countries are keen to invest in India. .Development of any country cannot take place without the money which is leg or arm- either you use it or lose it (Henry Ford). Being FDI an important tool in the hands of developing and underdeveloped countries, this study is being undertaken to know the extent India has got benefitted from FDI and how this country can attract more and more FDI by creating beautiful avenues for investors and how to overcome the loopholes if any. In this paper we will see FDI inflow in India since 2010 and fluctuations over the time.

KEY WORDS: FDI, India, Growth, Top investing countries, sector wise FDI. Govt. Policy.
