

E-GOVERNANCE IN INDIA

MRS.ANITA

ASSOCIATE PROFESSOR, DELHI COLLEGE OF ARTS AND COMMERCE, UNIVERSITY OF DELHI.

DR. PAWAN KUMAR SHARMA

PRINCIPAL, DYAL SINGH EVENING COLLEGE, UNIVERSITY OF DELHI.

ABSTRACT

The use of ICT (Information and Communication Technology) can be a powerful tool for good governance, simply the ability of government to provide access to services and information 24x7. This paper highlights the need and importance of e governance in India. It gives the few basic model and framework followed. The paper also highlights the main e governance project in India. It ends with listing the challenges in implementing e governance in India. It ends up giving some conclusions and suggestions to make e-governance a successful and powerful tool.

ABBREVIATIONS USED: ICT,IT,NIC,NICNET,DISNIC,IS,NEGP,G2C,C2G,G2G,G2B.

REFERENCE

1. Baark, E. &Heeks, R.B. (1999), 'Donor-funded information technology transfer projects', Information Technology for Development, 8(4), 185-197
2. Benjamin, P. (2001), 'Community development and democratisation through information technology: building the new South Africa'; in Reinventing Government in the Information Age, R.B. Heeks (ed.), Routledge, London, 194-210
3. Braa, J. &Hedberg, C. (2000), 'Developing district-based health care information systems'; in Information Flows, Local Improvisations and Work Practices, Proceedings of the IFIP WG9.4 Conference 2000, Cape Town
4. Heeks, R.B. (2001b), Reinventing Government in the Information Age, Routledge, London
5. Heeks, R.B. (forthcoming) e-Government: An International Text on Public Sector Information Systems, Sage, London
6. Moussa, A. &Schware, R. (1992), 'Informatics in Africa: lessons from World Bank experience', World Development, 20(12), 1737-1752
7. Ntiro, S. (2000), e-Government in Eastern Africa, KPMG, Dar-es-Salaam